(34~36)

Allman was a blind boy. His eyes were badly hurt because he fell off a train when he was four years old. From then on, he couldn't see anything. In fact, Allman learned to feel his life more colorful after he became blind.

One day, when Allman was sitting on a bench at the park, a girl came to him and gave him a baseball. He felt hurt because he thought the girl was just laughing at him. "How could a blind one play baseball?" "I can't use it," he said. "Take it and just roll it around," the girl smiled and said. "Roll it around!" Allman thought about the words and he rolled the baseball around. By doing so, Allman could hear where it went. This also gave him an idea that he could really achieve something even though he was blind. He could make good use of his listening ability to "play baseball." Many years later, Allman invented an interesting game of baseball for the blind people. It's called "ground ball."

It's 11:30 p.m. You still have some homework to finish and you need to be at school by 7 the next morning. Sound familiar? If this is like your everyday life, you may not get enough sleep. Some people say, "I only need five hours of sleep," or "I'll sleep more on the weekend," but the truth is that sleeping too little for a long time is bad for us. Busy people say that you can catch up on sleep on the weekend. However, a study shows that not getting enough sleep during the week makes people to become fat.

So how much sleep should a student get? A study answered this question. It depends on their age. Boys and girls between ages 6 and 13 should get 9-11 hours and teenagers (14-17 years old) should get 8-10 hours of sleep every night. If you do, you may be healthier and better at school and sports. You can also feel good about life.

A few nights of little sleep aren't big deal, but getting too little sleep for a long time is "sleep deprivation." It's a much bigger problem than most people may believe. Sleep deprivation can make anyone feel angry. Over time, it can even hurt the body. People may get heavier and become weaker. Also, being tired during the day makes it easier to feel sad or have accidents. It is harder for people to remember things and pay attention to important things. That's why many countries around the world start to notice this problem.
